

Instructions for Preparing for Careers

Part One

Sponsored by

When a student reaches middle school, students and their parents should begin the process of exploring possible future careers. Discovering the requirements and opportunities in the pursuit of careers should begin as soon as possible. Students will be able to make decisions about selections and options of classes in middle school and the student's ultimate career goal should be kept in mind in selecting every class.

This year a series of articles will outline preparations for post high school education and careers. Understanding the processes necessary to prepare for careers and higher education will help the students more effectively plan for their future.

In formulating a plan for a future career, students can begin their search by using the interest survey on www.ms.bridges.com. They must first create a new portfolio before using the resources of this site. Under the "Work Category", click on the Interest Profiler for the first questionnaire to help the student define personal interests.

Remember, choosing a career that requires a college or career school education will provide more income for the student throughout his/her life. As you look at the chart to the left, you will see how more education will bring the student a higher salary, more career choices, and less possibility of being unemployed.
